The work in Putting Out Fire lives at an intersection between surrealism and the sublime through narrative sculpture. In his concentrated studio practice he produces colorful sculptures made from memories collected during time spent in both natural and manufactured landscapes. These objects exist as portals into worlds where familiar objects hold space for dreaming and exploration.

<https://moreanartscenter.org/exhibition/artist-in-residence-exit-exhibitions/>. Israel Davis: Devil-May-Care May 11-May 31, Inspired by the devil-may-care spirit of skateboarding and the heathenistic ethos of a rough-and-tumble youth, this work explores inherent risk as manifest through observation and action. The physical action of fragmentation coalesces with collaged imagery in guise of poetic surveillance. Surveying and experience as lived through action. Israel "Izzy" Davis is an artist whose work plays between the boundaries of object and image. He has taught numerous workshops and exhibited nationally and internationally. Izzy's work ranges in content from personal narratives, observations, particulars, and fun. He is a professor and head of ceramics at Central Michigan University.
